ST. MARIE CALLED TO THE STAND.

Merratt Confessed to Having Left Washington After the Assassination.

The trial of John H. Secretal was resumed this morning in Criminal Court, Judge Pisher presiding. The court them was again crowded with spectators. Judge Pisher is the very weak, and was too unwell to appear in court at an early bour, and consequently the business of the day was not commenced until twenty minutes past ten A. M.

he court yesterday, and he would ask that he reporter's notes he read in order that the Court might see what led to the attack and that his attention might be directed to the facts. The Court was much engaged at the time, and his itosor possibily not having heard the remark, he desired that the noise of what transpired should be read; for it recemed to him that, if not in precise words, the Court, at least in substance censured the coursel, and it was mecessary, therefore, that the noise should be read; and he thought it would appear that no provocation had been given by counsel. The Court should take some notice of the context, as the substance censured the coursel, and he thought it would appear that no provocation had been given by counsel. The Court should take some notice of the context, as it was due to the members of the bar that adequate protection should be given to counsel in every case.

Mr. Clephane, the official reporter, then read an extract from his notes of vesterday, including the passage between she witness and Mr. Merrick.

Judge Fisher said that when the testimony immediately preceding he objectionable remarks was being given yester, shay he de not hear all of it, and when the witness made he remarks and the remark he did, he dough Fisher; supposed that countries the did, he dough Fisher; supposed that countries the did, he dough Fisher; supposed that countries and the remarks of the witness, although Mr. Merrick may have said on a former occasion that some of the witnesses were descring of the penitentary. It is not the place of witnesses to take exceptions to remarks of counsel, he had never seen a case in which there was so asset truth and so much truth and the remark and twenty and there had been in this case, and it was not to be wondered at that they sometimes felt insulied, canedially at such research and the remark and twenty of the Court, and their rights will be respected. Mr would come behind bim; on the evening before landing at Londondery, between eleven and twelve o'clock, I was called out and passed the prisoner standing on what is called the "after square;" be was all dressed, ready to go ashore; he had previously asked my advice about landing, asked on the pool of the p

No cross-camination.

Judge Fisher said the court had now been in session over three hours, and, as it was a very oppressive day, it would probably be well to take a recess now.

Mr. Brailey said the defence would like to be informed when the prosecution would close the testimony, in order that they might know what to do with the witnesses for the defence.

Mr. Carrington said they would probably close to-morrow, but he could not be certain upon that point.

Mr. Morrick suggested that there was an hour that could be very profitably used to-day yet.

Judge Fisher said he had already exceeded the limits prescribed by his physician.

The court, therefore, at ten minutes past two o'clock adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

SIX CHILDREN DRAWMED.

[From the Memphis Avalanche, June 20.]

Six children, between the ages of seven and fifteen years, were yesierday, about two o'clock P. M., in a dug out on Wolf river, near its month, on a swimming excursion, when the heat upset, and the whole of them were drowned. One of them, named Pat Murphy, was able to swim and might have got out, but his younger brother, John, caught hold of him and both went down. The names of the other victims were John Brophy, Henry Marshall, John Welsh and Ned Fitusimmona. A man on shore saw the accident and tried to throw ropes and boards to the drowning children, but they failed to get hold of them, and all his efforts were unavailing. The body of John Brophy was recovered last evening. None of the others have been found.
